About sixteen men were on deck, but according to the statements of several on watch they and most of their comrades were asleep forward. The men of the crew below were rudely awakened by the terrific shock, and sprang hastily from their hammocks. The water flooded both decks, and instantly the sailors, abandoning everything, rushed on deck through the debrie. There was no confusion, only a great degree of haste. Some twenty a great degree of haste. Some twenty or thirty men took to the water, in-stead of to the boats. All this hap-pened in five minutes. The Tallapoosa had begun to sink, and in a few min utes her hull was completely sub-merged. Not one of the head officers had left the craft.
